BEACHES

ORGANISED

Kaki Lagada

kaki Lagada is a popular organized beach known for its crystal-clear waters and relaxing atmosphere. It offers sunbeds, umbrellas, and a nearby beach bar, making it ideal for a comfortable day by the sea. The beach is family-friendly, with calm, shallow waters perfect for swimming and sunbathing.

Located at the southern tip of Paxos, Mongonissi is a calm, organized beach with a charming coastal vibe. Surrounded by greenery and calm waters, it's a great spot for families and couples alike. The beach offers sunbeds, umbrellas, and a taverna serving local dishes, making it an easy and enjoyable place to spend the day.

Monodendri

Situated on the east coast of Paxos, Monodendri is a well-organized beach known for its beauty and accessibility. Visitors can enjoy sunbeds, umbrellas, and a beachside tavern offering local cuisine. The waters are clear and inviting, perfect for swimming or simply relaxing in the sun.

BEACHES

NON-ORGANISED

Balos

Balos is a picturesque, non-organized beach located on the southeastern coast of Paxos. It boasts clear blue waters and a natural, unspoiled setting, ideal for visitors seeking tranquility and beauty. With no facilities, it offers a raw and peaceful beach experience for nature lovers.

Marmari
Marmari is a peaceful beach surrounded by olive trees that provide natural shade right down to the shoreline. It is nonorganized and perfect for visitors who enjoy quiet spots without the bustle of beach bars or crowds.
The beach's clear waters and natural ambiance make it ideal for a relaxing day in nature.

Kipos

Kipos is a non-organized beach that combines accessibility with natural charm. Reachable by car, it offers a quiet environment with crystal-clear waters and a pebbled shore. It's perfect for those who prefer a simple, unspoiled beach day without the need for amenities.

Kipiadi

Kipiadi is the longest beach on Paxos and, although non-organized, it is one of the most accessible and popular. It features calm, turquoise waters and a spacious pebbled shore. Surrounded by olive groves, it's ideal for swimming, sunbathing, or enjoying a quiet picnic.

Erimitis

Located on the dramatic western coast of Paxos, Erimitis is one of the most breathtaking beaches on the island. It is non-organized and accessed via a steep and challenging path, making it best suited for adventurous visitors. The beach is backed by towering white cliffs and offers incredible sunset views. However, the sea here is often wavy, so extra caution is advised when swimming.

Orkos

Orkos is a serene, non-organized beach that offers a peaceful escape. With its clear waters and quiet surroundings, it's perfect for those looking to unwind in a more remote setting. While there are no facilities, the natural beauty and calm atmosphere make it a rewarding spot to visit.

THE ISLAND

Paxos, the baby of the Heptanese islands, is part of a complex of smaller islands known as Paxi, located in the northern Ionian Sea, just seven miles south of Corfu and eight miles from mainland Greece.

According to mythology, it was created by Poseidon to provide a hideaway for his love with Amphitrite. The capital is Gaios, a beautiful village on the island's east coast, protected by two small islands, Agios Nikolaos and Panagia. The other two central points of the island are the villages of Lakka and Longos, located on the north and west sides of the island, respectively.

The history of Paxos is filled with important moments, as it has passed through the hands of many peoples over the centuries—Romans, Venetians, French, Russians, and Ottomans—each leaving a distinct mark on its identity.

Paxos is a lush, green island—a forest rising out of the sea—rich with olive and pine trees, and home to beautiful beaches that make it one of the Mediterranean's most stunning destinations. Its western coast is lined with caves and beaches that are only accessible by sea. Nearby Antipaxos, a smaller island, is also renowned for its exotic beaches. The Paxiots are warm, welcoming people who love their traditions while embracing modern European life. Paxos was designated Cultural Village of Europe in 2004, highlighting its commitment to preserving its unique cultural heritage.

An ideal place for a vacation, Paxos is perfect for travelers seeking rest, beauty, and a unique blend of sea and forest.

Tour of Gaios

Gaios is located on the south-east coast of Paxos, with a population of 1,345 (2021 census). It is the island's largest settlement and main port.

The town is named after the Apostle Gaios, a disciple of the Apostle Paul, who is said to have preached Christianity on the island. Gaios has been a center of continuous human activity throughout Paxos's history and has served as a safe haven for locals and foreigners alike, thanks to the protection offered by the islets of Agios Nikolaos and Panagia. The village was gradually built from the shore inland and up the surrounding slopes, in part to protect the population from pirate raids. Ruins of fortifications and a cannon station at the port's entrance are reminders of this past. In recent years, Gaios has seen a growth in residential development, and many stately homes have been restored. Neoclassical architectural elements from the 19th century give the town a charming appearance, enhanced by newer touches. The front of the town, where boats sail into the port, is especially picturesque.

At the entrance to the port, the green islets of Agios Nikolaos and Panagia provide both natural beauty and shelter, offering a warm welcome to arriving visitors.

Longos

Located 5.5 km north of Gaios, Longos is home to around 280 residents. It is a classic example of a Heptanesian village, with a small harbor lined with fishing boats, traditional stone houses with colorful shutters, old windmills on the hills, and thick olive and pine groves. On the left side of the harbor stands an abandoned factory, once used for soap and olive oil production. Though no longer in use, it remains a historical landmark that speaks to the village's industrious past.

Lakka

Idyllic and popular, Lakka sits at the northern tip of Paxos, nestled in a sheltered bay 8 km from Gaios. A car park is available just before entering the village. Surrounded by green hills, the dense vegetation stretches right down to the sea. This charming village consists of a few dozen stone cottages. It was named after its first settlers, who came from Lakka in Souli, Epirus. Fleeing persecution by Ali Pasha of Ioannina, they found refuge on Paxos and Antipaxos. In the central square, you'll find cozy tavernas where you can enjoy authentic local cuisine. Lakka's lovely little harbor is especially popular with boaters, who anchor their vessels in the calm, safe waters of the bay.

Magazia

Magazia is a small village that once served as the island's capital. It's nestled among olive groves filled with ancient trees, offering a peaceful and serene atmosphere, just a short distance from the sea. It is officially designated a traditional settlement. As you explore the village, you'll see many stone-built homes and beautifully crafted stone walls—reminders of its prosperous past. In earlier times, residents from across the island would gather here on Sundays and religious feast days to enjoy the tavernas and community spirit. Just opposite the church of Agios Spyridon is the road leading to Boikatika and on to the wild beach of Erimitis—one of Paxos's most breathtaking locations, especially at sunset.

Ozias

Ozias is one of Paxos's oldest villages, located on gently sloping hills that reach down to the sea. It is home to some of the island's most ancient religious sites, including the remains of the Early Christian church of Agia Marina—believed to be the first church built on the island—and the ruins of the church of Agios Stephanos. Both were built over the remnants of ancient temples. To the right of Ozias's quiet, deserted harbor, natural medicinal springs flow from within a small cave. These healing waters are ideal for those suffering from ailments such as rheumatism, sciatica, neurological disorders, and arthritis.
